SYMPOSIUM ON THE FAMILY
TO BE HELD AT UD

DAYTON, Ohio, October 20, 1982 -- A symposium on the family will be held October 27 and 28 at the University of Dayton. As a follow-up to the Catholic Church's December 1981 statement on marriage and theology, members of the University of Dayton community have organized this symposium to look at the official document from an American point-of-view.

Patricia Voydanoff, director of research for the UD Center for the Study of Family Development; Stan Saxton, chair of the Department of Sociology; Sister Angela Ann Zukowski, director of the Center for Creative Ministry-MORES; and Richard Boulet, professor of religious studies, are members of the committee organizing the symposium.

The four main areas to be covered during the two days are theology and marriage and family, family as the basic unit of society, changing patterns of work and family roles, and family policy.

Twelve papers will be presented on various areas of family life by experts in these fields. Some of the participants are Maureen Gallagher, director of Catholic Family Ministry for the Archdiocese of Milwaukee; Charles Wilber, chair of the economics department at the University of Notre Dame; Jerry Reigier, associate commissioner of the Office on Families in Washington, D.C.; and Reverend Michael D. Place, S.T.D., dean of Athenaeum of Ohio.

For more information on the symposium, call Stan Saxton at 229-2138. The symposium is free and open to the public.
